3 Research Interests

Within a framework of Geographic Information Science, my research has extended a tradition of area classification in Geography. I have developed an empirically informed critique of the ways in which geodemographic methods can be refined for effective yet ethical use in public resource allocation applications. This research has developed from substantive interests in the investigation of the social, spatial and temporal dimensions of access inequalities in Higher Education. In addition to this core research agenda, I have also explored issues of digital exclusion and deprivation, school commuting behaviour, as well as the ways in which Neo-geography mapping tools and techniques can be utilised in activities related to the public understanding of science. I am an advocate of open source data and software, and the majority of my research (and research led teaching) involve the use of open geocomputation with large administrative or crowd sourced datasets.

11 Impact and Knowledge Transfer

For each research project I have been involved with, a range of academic publications have been produced. In addition to this scholarly output, each project is typically accompanied with a website aiming to disseminate the findings more broadly and where possible to engage a wide public audience. These websites take a variety of different formats and are briefly detailed in the following section with evidence for their success measured in terms of press coverage.

(a) Software

gd (<http://rpubs.com/alexsingleton/gd>) - An R package for building, testing and visualisation of geodemographic classification.

OAC Coder (<http://www.publicprofiler.org/resources.php>) - Postcode profiling tool for the ONS Output Area Classification (downloaded over 700 times).

(b) Websites

I have developed and/or manage a range successful websites created as part of activities associated with research grants. These websites have wide ranging purposes, including pedagogic resource dissemination, public participation in GIS or impact generation. Many of these sites have captured a wide and international audience. For example, the worldnames (worldnames.publicprofiler.org) website has recieved over 2 million unique users from 200 countries since August 30 2008.

www.policestreets.co.uk - a new visualisation of crime data.

rpubs.com/alexsingleton/ - R tutorials.

www.educationprofiler.org - School and catchment profiles with Google Maps.

gbnames.publicprofiler.org - 1881 and 1998 GB surname mapping website.

worldnames.publicprofiler.org - world surname mapping website.

esociety.publicprofiler.org - e-Society profiler website (search by postcode).

www.onomap.org - name classification website.

www.publicprofiler.org - neighbourhood profiler website (search by postcode).

www.qmrg.org.uk - quantitative methods news and resources including CATMOG.
